Special education laws require a re-evaluation of a child with an exceptionality at least once every three years, unless the school and the parent(s), or other legally authorized education decision maker, of the student agree that a re-evaluation is unnecessary.

The above-named parent(s)/decision maker and school representative agree that a re-evaluation for the above-named student is not necessary at this time, and therefore no re-evaluation will be conducted. Both parties understand that a re-evaluation may be requested by either party at any time in the future.
